

ZEITZ MOCAA PRESENTS ONE THOUSAND VOICES, AN EXHIBITION BY OWANTO

Cape Town: On 6 February 2019, the Zeitz Museum of Contemporary Art Africa (Zeitz MOCAA) opens an immersive sound installation by multicultural Gabonese artist, Owanto. The installation, titled One Thousand Voices, highlights gender inequality and the politics surrounding women's bodies.

The exhibition introduces audio testimonies from survivors of female genital mutilation/cutting (FGM/C) and is curated by Gcotyelwa Mashiga and Sakhisizwe Gcina. Using various languages, the installation projects voices and stories of survival and resilience, with the voices weaving together to create one collective narrative.

"This exhibition confronts the stigma which prevents women from speaking out against the violation of their rights to decide how they want to exist in the world. It is our hope that One Thousand Voices is a declaration of women empowerment and instigates a conversation about the freedom of self-determination," says Gcina.

The piece is composed like a symphony — voices are recorded on a smartphone and sent via WhatsApp — with several movements, elements and choruses. The juxtaposition of analogue and digital works in the exhibition create a bridge between the past, present, and future — linking the archival images from Owanto's Flower series (2017) and an audio installation, One Thousand Voices (2018).

Mashiga further states, "through One Thousand Voices we hope to provide a space where people will reflect on the survivor's trauma and journey to find an alternative rite of passage. This exhibition attempts to acknowledge a multitude of stories, experiences and realities, particularly those of marginalised persons."

In addition to this transcultural narrative, it is important to merge the artistic and journalistic forms. "It all started with found photographs of a female circumcision ceremony hidden in a forgotten drawer. One of these photographs - La Jeune Fille à La Fleur from the Flower series — is part of the permanent collection at Zeitz MOCAA. It stands as a symbol for change," says Owanto.

The exhibition opens on the International Day of Zero Tolerance for Female Genital Mutilation with a panel discussion. Statistics report 200 million girls and women alive today have undergone Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting—14 million are under the age of 15 years old. FGM/C is practiced in 30 countries in western, eastern, and north-eastern Africa, including parts of the Middle East and Asia. It is also prevalent within some immigrant communities in Europe, North America and Australia.

The panel discussion will be facilitated by Acting Chief Curator at Zeitz MOCAA, Azu Nwagbogu, artist Owanto, journalist/producer Katya Berger, and a guest activist Elizabeth Katamboi.
